Senator van Rooyen's push for additional nurses at Kgosi Mampuru II does not go far enough EDITORS PLEASE NOTE: This article is written from a South African context and it is meant for the readers of South Africa. A parliamentary committee report released today recommended that the South African Parliament amend section 76 of the Constitution to allow for the registration of private sector nurses and the introduction of a national nurse registration board to develop nurse-training programmes in nursing. It also said that the South African Nurses and Midwives Council (SANDC) be empowered to accredit and supervise private nursing and midwifery programmes, and that a national nurse registration board, comprising medical practitioners, should be established to accredit all nurses and midwives. We have already seen initiatives along these lines, with the introduction of "certified nursing assistant" programmes, the nurse assistant specialisation programme, and the nurse specialist and nurse practitioner programmes. We also have the private nursing programme and the private midwife training and accreditation programme. But most of these initiatives are done ad hoc, and they are not comprehensively thought out. It is my hope that the report would be the catalyst that would enable the profession to develop a policy that would establish nurse registration in the country. Funding But the report is very weak on the funding issue. The NPA has warned that the healthcare system could collapse without some serious re-engineering of the number and location of the healthcare workforce in the country. The Auditor General's report on the health sector should be an eye-opener to the government and health insurance agencies. The report showed that the government spent almost R5 billion on healthcare in 2017, yet only R3.2 billion was invested in nursing and midwifery. Moreover, the expenditure on nursing and midwifery was way below the 3% that is recommended by the World Health Organization. The NPA is therefore recommending the establishment of a national hospital funding agency, which will include healthcare financing, enrolment and a national education, training and examination system that will link to the skills development plan. An important part of this will be to change the licensing and certification of nurses and midwives, like the provision of state registered nurse (SRN) and nurse midwife (SRNM) degrees. The SRNs and SRNMs are the backbone of the healthcare system. The medical

The long-standing quest for rotational switching of a single transition dipole on a single molecule has finally been achieved on individual achiral molecules under a single-degree-of-freedom Hamiltonian. An optical excitation of a chiral molecule with a single transition dipole can lead to remarkable rotational switching dynamics. Inspired by these rotational switching phenomena, we demonstrate an efficient single-step rotational switching of a single transition dipole on a single molecule. A single chiral molecule, covalently attached to the tip of a scanning tunneling microscope, exhibits a rotational switching between its two degenerate ground states that are connected by a singlet and triplet spin state, respectively. The rotational switching is achieved by tuning the tunneling coupling to a specific spin state that is not energetically accessible otherwise. Based on our observations, we build up a novel system for entangling high-energy multiple electronic states in molecules with low-energy states in the atomic force microscope tunneling junction. Q: Can an event trigger another event in JavaScript? I use Firebase in my application and as I see, you can create a cloud function for every single data that is published. My question is, can I make something that would execute another function when a user logs in? Say I have a database with data like this: Then with a cloud function I can detect when a user registers and then insert data into a table with this: exports.login = functions.auth.user().onCreate((userRecord) => { const userId = userRecord.uid; const newUserEntry = { name: userRecord.displayName, email: userRecord.email, userId: userId }; return admin.database().ref().child('users').push(newUserEntry).then((snapshot) => { console.log('The snapshot completed successfully.');

System Requirements For Adobe Photoshop 2021 (Version 22.4.2):

Supported video card: 2G or better RAM Minimum resolution of 800 x 600 System Requirements: I use Liquidmetal (a translucent version of clear plastic) to make models. The problem I've encountered is that the Clear Plastic is very hard to apply in a series of small areas, and that's what I have to do for most armor pieces. I have a small compressor, but I still struggle to get small details. The main problem is the surface
