Topography of functionalized polymer/DNA nanocomposites. Using single-stranded DNA, neutral and cationic polymers are successfully prepared and characterized. These materials are used to prepare Langmuir monolayers at the air-water interface. These films were analysed by X-ray diffraction, infrared spectroscopy and atomic force microscopy. We demonstrate that the Langmuir film composed of poly(ethylene imine) and oligo-DNA is able to release entrapped proteins from bacteria cells. This release is a reversible process and can be controlled by the ionic strength of the buffer. is a need to include biological knowledge of how different types of microbes interact with other living organisms, the environment and each other in order to construct model-based quantitative frameworks that include environmental heterogeneity and topology.
