[Responses of nitrogen pools and the nitrification process to fertilization in an alpine herb arable community in Xinjiang]. Soil samples from an alpine herb arable community were collected in Haba Mountain of Xinjiang Province and were treated by a slurry--lysis-acid hydrolysis--subcritical fluid extraction--Kjeldahl method to determine soil total nitrogen and extractable N. A pot experiment was conducted in laboratory, in which the soil total nitrogen and extractable N were measured at 0, 30, 60, 90, and 120 days, and the activities of nitrification were monitored by measuring nitrification rates and nitrification enzyme activities. Results showed that, with the increase of nitrogen rate, extractable N, soil nitrate nitrogen and ammonia nitrogen increase but there was a decrease of nitrite nitrogen, soil total nitrogen, and nitrification activity. The activity of nitrification was significantly higher in N2O, whereas, the nitrification rates in N2 were much higher than that in N2O. The activity of aminotransferase and alpha-amylase showed no significant differences between N2O and N2, whereas the activity of urease was significantly higher in N2O than in N2. It was concluded that, though the experimental period was long, the effect of N fertilization was not significantly obvious at this stage in an alpine herb arable community. The activity of nitrification was lower in this stage, which was the result of the feedback of excess fertilizer.
