Staphylococcal hemolysin B/cytolysin (SHB/CYN) has been shown to be a potent beta-haemolysin that lyses erythrocytes and modifies the plasma membrane of a variety of cells. To investigate whether SHB/CYN acts on mammalian cells by a mechanism involving pore formation similar to the action of another beta-haemolysin previously reported in Escherichia coli named EHEC, we tested the effect of SHB/CYN on cultured human cell lines that include Epstein-Barr virus-transformed lymphoblastoid cell lines (LCLs), HeLa cells, U937 and HL60 cells as well as primary monocytes. SHB/CYN has no haemolytic activity on cells expressing the globoside-Gb
