Glucocorticoid effect on hypothalamic gene expression of corticotropin-releasing hormone and vasopressin in the rat. The dexamethasone-suppressible increase in plasma ACTH and corticosterone levels, which occurs in healthy intact male rats, is associated with a shift in the circulating gonadal steroid levels. This change precedes by several days the rise in pituitary and adrenal corticotropin-releasing hormone (CRH) and vasopressin (AVP) mRNA in individual male rats. The changes in circulating hormone levels, and subsequently in pituitary and adrenal CRH and AVP mRNA, are prevented by the depleting effects of the gonadal steroid. These findings indicate that the circulating gonadal steroid levels must be available to exert their effects on the pituitary-adrenal system via hypothalamic regulation. We used in situ hybridization to examine the effects of dexamethasone treatment on the CRH and AVP mRNA levels in the hypothalamus. In male rats, there was a decrease in CRH and AVP mRNA levels in the paraventricular nucleus following dexamethasone treatment. The majority of CRH positive cells in the paraventricular nucleus showed the dexamethasone-induced decrease in CRH mRNA levels. The decrease in the mRNA levels of the paraventricular CRH cells after dexamethasone treatment was not accompanied by a decrease in CRH protein levels. These results suggest that a decrease in CRH and AVP mRNA in the paraventricular nucleus may be a molecular mechanism by which circulating steroids regulate pituitary-adrenal function.

On Wednesday the House Judiciary Committee passed a number of articles of impeachment against President Trump. The far left Democrats who orchestrated this unconstitutional impeachment sham in the first place are now openly admitting they got everything wrong from the start. But they still want Trump impeached... even after the President just got re-elected! The lunacy and insanity in the House of Representatives continues to escalate, and by Wednesday night there were only 4 amendments that were allowed to be made to the House's resolution on the articles of impeachment. 6d1f23a050
