finally, a note about the model (and hopefully this disclaimer as well). this model is not intended to be very accurate, it is just a nice, simple way to see how leverage affects things. for a slightly more accurate version, see this pdf . when i first started taking the finance classes at boalt, one of the first things i read was a case study that looked at amgen. amgen is a biotech company that produces medicine, much of it aimed at cancer. it was founded in 1980 and has recently transitioned from drug development to drug enhancement. i was fascinated by the case and, while i was a finance major, i wanted to be able to apply some of the concepts of finance to what i was reading. however, as i found out, the case was written in 1970 and then nothing happened for the next 22 years. i am not sure why (i suppose the no. 1 reason would be that the class was only for finance majors..). i went to boalt and made sure that i learned the basics and then decided to try and write my own case. i got started with what i knew and gradually added the rest as i could. a few years ago, when i first saw the opening sequence of a hard days night, i commented that it reminded me a bit of the opening of the film dirty harry (the movie with clint eastwood, not the tv series). i was particularly taken by the similarities to the iconic opening of the godfather, which was also set in new york, and took place within a year of the godfather opening. i was struck by how this opening sequence looked so contemporary, even though the events it depicts took place more than forty years ago. i felt that the film was less a period piece and more a story about the american experience in the second half of the 20th century.

Approximately 30 years prior to the events of the movie, China and Russia had established a Treaty of Friendship in the Northern Areas. The treaty had one major stipulation - no military bases would be allowed in this region of space. This treaty is often interpreted to be Russia's way of keeping a lid on China's military adventures. It was later learned that Russia was also impressed by China's way of conducting warfare, as their conflict with Japan had shown. China also had an inability to find its way into space without Russia's help. Because of this treaty, the PLA was forced to create a network of space colonies to take advantage of the newly conquered territory. One of these colonies is the Kuangzhou Base, located on the moon. In the late 20th century, the two space colonies of the People's Liberation Army became in danger of being overrun by a neighboring state. It is during this time that the Lunar Dragon Clan emerge to save the colony on the moon. The Lunar Dragon Clan is led by An-Li, a former soldier and a descendant of a family of Taekwondo practitioners. On a mission to the moon, An-Li was stripped of his abilities as a natural-born warrior, and he was thrown off the lunar colony in disgrace. He was also banished to Earth, but somehow he was recovered and returned to the moon in hopes of rebuilding his abilities. The lunar colony is under siege by an unknown number of invading forces. The invaders themselves are all wearing black, and they are engaged in battles with the forces of the Lunar Dragon Clan. It is also discovered that this invasion is being orchestrated by a mysterious leader known as the White Tiger. If the lunar colony falls to the invaders, they will pursue the Celestial Dragons, and when they come down to Earth to kill the Celestial Dragons, they will set their eyes on Earth once again.
