the fender stratocaster electric guitar is an iconic, american-built solid-body guitar. it is the most commercially successful version of the stratocaster electric guitar, having been made in greater quantities than any other model. the stratocaster was designed in 1953 by an american luthier named leo fender, and it was the first successful all-solidbody electric guitar. the earliest version of the guitar was the 1952 "telecaster" model. the original version had a trapeze tailpiece, like the telecaster, and a single pickup in the middle of the guitar. this model was originally called the "nashville". the "telecaster" design was the result of a collaboration between gibson's chief designer, floyd rose, and the company's head luthier, ernie ball. to generate a serial number for the guitar, i just followed the basic steps of the serial number generator found on the website. i plugged it into my laptop running guitar rig 6 and with a few hits of the keys, it generated a serial number. the first part of the serial number is the build year, which is 1962 for this guitar. the next part of the serial number is what we call a "crossover" number, meaning that once the year is set, the crossover point can be used to break the channel and let you mix and match the two channels. so 1963 for the build year would be crossover point 1 and 1962 for this build year would be crossover point 2. i was able to verify this serial number on my guitar rig 5 and the serial number generated was identical. it is the model number of the guitar. the next two parts of the serial number are the neck number and the fretboard number. i could use this serial number to order a guitar from the gibson website.
