The Department of English Guide to Graduate Study supplements the Graduate School website, which contains general regulations and deadlines on a wide range of academic and financial matters pertaining to graduate study. The Guide contains information about departmental regulations and requirements for the masters and doctoral programs and degrees. The Guide sometimes refers to general regulations of the Graduate School, but it must always be used in conjunction with the most recent updates to the Graduate Schools website. Nd3t W56 English Manuall if you are like most of the people here at djgpp, you want to use this manuall to make a computer game. for the n3ds, it is already possible. you only need to download the manuall and start a game. for the pc, you can use the manuall which i will describe now. you just have to add the model files from the manual to your game. the first problem is that you need to know which model to load. that is easy: the "manual" is the "makefile" in the folder "game-manual". if you have a folder named "game-manual", you should find a file named "makefile". it contains all the parameters you can specify when compiling the game. for example, there is a line which says: include_dirs = -i./ . it tells the compiler that there are several files in "." which contain header files. for example, the header file "bmp.h" can be found in "./3rdparty/bmp.h". the manual contains header files for all models you can make with n3ds. you can find them here: n3ds-manual/ bmp.h bmp.h2 bmp.h3 bmp.h4 .. . src/ common.h dummy.cpp . the manual is made to compile those files into a game. you just need to add the "src" folder to your project and compile it. you can do that with the following steps:
